

THREE CONCERTS IN TWO DAYS. READY! SET! LET'S GO!

DAY 1: JUNE 7

((6:30 A.M.))

RISE AND SHINE The girls get ready to begin a jam-packed day that includes two shows in two states, New York and Connecticut. They grab a quick bite before leaving their hotel in New Jersey to attend DigiFest, the first ever social media music festival, at the New York Mets' Citi Field.

ON THE ROAD AGAIN Next, the ladies head out to Windsor, Conn., where they will perform at the prom for Pathways Academy of Technology & Design, which won their performance in an online contest. Once there, the girls have a wardrobe change and pose for fan photos.

IT'S THE WU! The girls go through their preperformance routine: a group prayer capped off by screaming, "Wu Tang!" Cabello explains, "A couple of shows ago, our security guard Big Rob was trying to gather all of us girls when he randomly said 'Wu Tang! Let's go!' We thought it was the funniest thing in the world because he said it so powerfully and there we were—I remember putting on my hair bow and Ally her neon-pink lipstick. [Laughs] It's stuck with us since."

SHOWTIME The audience sings along to every song, and some hold up banners proclaiming their undying love. "She's been preparing for this her whole life, taking gymnastics, dancing classes, singing," Kordei's mother, Andrea Hamilton, says proudly. "We made so many sacrifices, but now she is here."

PROM QUEENS

It's time to play for an intimate group of 40 students. "It was a very small prom, but it was fun because we got to interact with the audience," says Hernandez. "They enjoyed our show." From there, it's back to DigiFest for another performance.

POWER IN NUMBERS

Adding up their social media followers, there are over 10 million Harmonizers, as their fan base is called. "I wrote an English essay about Fifth Harmony," says Harmonizer Ashley, at DigiFest. "One time I was up past my bedtime, and I tweeted at Ally to please follow me back. She wrote 'Okay, now go to bed!' Ha!"
